I wonder if the editor ever heard the story of the house with a leaning wall? Well, there is such a house in a certain ward in this city the history of which throws some light upon the stude of the money which is spent so freely.

This was a four-story stone-front nouse. It was for sale. An individual called on the agent and offered a sum so ridiculously small in the opinion of the agent that it was promptly rejected. Soon the agent received notice from the building inspector that one wall of the house had a bulge in it and would have to be torn down, since it was dangerous. The agent remonstrated, but in vain. Counting the cost of removing the wall, he determined to accept the offer which he had rejected. In the course of a few weeks it became apparent who had been the real purchaser of the bouse. The ward boss took possession. He lives there today in this stone front. The wall has not yet been replaced I. stands as one of many monuments of the tyranny that has grown so common among us.
